A dark horizontal strip is visible along the bottom edge, possibly indicating the binding or the edge of the book block. There is no text or other markings on the page.

A small, dark, irregular object, possibly a piece of debris or a small insect, resting on a light-colored, textured surface. The object is elongated and slightly curved, with some internal structure visible. The background is a light, mottled grey or off-white color with a fine, grainy texture. A dark, solid horizontal band runs across the bottom of the image.

A Pompeian House.

The house which was begun to be excavated at the celebration of the centenary of Pompeii, and is, therefore, called "Casa del Centenario," and from which it then saw these skeletons dug out, has proved to be the largest hitherto discovered, and is of peculiar interest. It contains two atria, two triclinia, four aule or wings, a calidarium, frigidarium, and tepidarium. It occupies the entire space between three streets, and most likely a fourth, which has yet to be excavated. The vestibule is elegantly decorated, and its mosaic pavement ornamented with the figure of a dolphin pursued by a sea-horse. In the first atrium, the walls of which are adorned with small theatrical scenes, the pavement is sunk and broken, as if by an earthquake, and there is a large hole through which one sees the cellar. The second atrium is very spacious, with a handsome peristyle, the columns—white and red stucco—being 20 feet high. In the center is a large marble basin, within the edge of which runs a row of steps. On the right at one side was found the statuette of the Fann which I lately described. The most interesting place in the house is an inner court or room, on one side of which is the niche, with a pedestal at one end, to be seen in the Pompeian houses. The frescoes on the walls are very beautiful. Close to the floor runs a wreath of leaves about a quarter of a yard wide, with alternately a lizard and a bird. Above it, about a yard, is a droop, as if from over a wall, large branches of vine or ivy and broad leaves like those of the tiger-lily—all very freely, naturally, and gracefully drawn. At each corner of the room, a bird clings to one of these branches. Then comes a space—bordered at the top by another row of leaves—in which is represented a whale aquarium, as if the room were lined with tanks. There are different sorts of shells and aquatic plants lying at the bottom of the water, and swimming in or on it all kinds of fish, jelly fish, sepias, ducks, and swans, admirably sketched with a light yet firm touch. The ripples made by the swimming ducks, sepias, and ducks, and one duck is just flying into the water with a splash. On each side of the niche this amusing aquarium is enlivened by a special incident. To the left a large octopus is caught in a monstrous mesh, which it is turning round to bite—in its tentacles; to the right a fine lobster has pierced another murena through and through with its long, hard feelers, or horns. These creatures are sketched in the natural colors very truthfully. On the left wall of the room, above the fishes, are two sphinxes, supporting on their heads square marble vases, on the rim of each of which sits a dove. Behind the niches, on the left side of the room, run a little gallery with a corridor underneath, lighted by small square holes in the border of hanging branches. The wall of this gallery behind the niches is decorated with the wooden lances, in which, on one side, is represented a lion running frantically away with a lion clinging to its haunches; on the other a horse lying struggling on its back, attacked by a leopard; and in the center, a lion attacking a lioness. On each side of the doorway, respectively, a graceful dove and a bear. The other rooms are also very beautiful; one with a splendidly elegant design on a black ground; in another a small fresco representing a man pouring wine out of an amphora into a large vessel. The bath rooms are large and elegant, the cold bath is a corner is dedicated to the lares and penates, and in the fresco decoration among the usual subjects, etc. I noticed the singular figure of a Bacchus or bacchant, entirely clothed with large grapes. In one of the mosaic pavements is a very fine scene, the colors very bright and well preserved. As some of the rooms are only excavated to within two or three feet of the floor, it is possible that many valuable ornaments or statuettes may yet be found, as everything indicates that this splendid house belonged to some rich citizen.—Indianapolis News.

A Remarkable Wagon.

A remarkable wagon has been invented in the West. It has four wheels of equal size, and perhaps five feet in diameter, on which to run. Above the hind wheels are seats for passengers and a bed for freight. In front of this bed and attached to the forward axle are cog wheels, and above them on a frame is a large cog wheel, one revolution of which turns a small cog wheel fastened to the axle a dozen or more times. The inventor's theory was that when the wagon was once set in motion its speed would be accelerated by its own motion, and that the only trouble would be in preventing it from running too fast. To keep it from running away with itself, across valleys and over mountains and never stopping until worn out, brakes were arranged to control it, and a steering apparatus was fixed over the wheels within reach of the driver. Much was expected of the machine by the inventor, who was positive that he had outrun a locomotive across the desert, and revolutionized the carrying trade, as neither fuel nor power of any kind was required to keep it going when once started.

Miss Julia Smith, of Gastonbury, Connecticut, whose cows have been annually sold for the satisfaction of the tax-gatherer, whom she refused to pay, has a rival, and an equally successful rival, in an old lady at Freeport, Long Island. She has not paid her taxes for several years. The Assessor, the Receiver of Taxes, the school tax collector and the census enumerator call, but are not admitted. She is either absent from the premises, or she keeps herself hidden from the sight. The zeal and persistence of these public officers are said to be a good deal mitigated by a shot-gun which she is believed to have in her house. She has been informed that her property will be sold, but the shot-gun is still loaded.—Detroit Press.

Madame, who is of great embonpoint, asks her husband in what character she shall appear at the masquerade. "As a captive balloon," he said. "How must I dress that character?" "Simply by tying a string to your foot," answered the brute.

Fishermen ought to make good actors, because they are always familiar with their lines, and well acquainted, as Pat says, with the scene.

N. P. Willis.

Though born in Portland, he was bred mostly in Boston, and yet he was one of the most un-Yankee characters I ever met. He did not feel affiliated with our free and easy democracy, rather holding himself aloof from the everyday contact of persons whose tastes and pursuits were not in accordance with his own.

In conversation Mr. Willis was genial, easy and communicative, but certainly not suggestive in thought, though very much so in fancy. To women he uttered graceful nothings, and as they cost him no effort he did not over-estimate them. He paid courteous respect to me as he did all others, often uttering elegant compliments, which might have half turned the head of a vain woman; but to a woman who mothers a great pride, or mothers a great sorrow, these pretty sayings are regarded as the fine fencing of a practiced master of the foils. I think me like a woman who can receive a compliment gracefully but not too easily.

"I am most happy," I once said to Willis, "in that I suggest compliment; I provoke men to the exhibition of their elegant store of fancy; I imagine I am a millinery was figure designed for the exhibition of beautiful fabrics."

"How foolish we all are!" he replied, "to lavish incense upon a shrine that never yields a response. I have just finished a paragraph to be next, Mr. Willis; put it into your next book. Why cannot writers give us their real compliments in their books? They would be far finer than what we read there."

"In the closest work the inspiration of fine eyes and speaking faces; the best things written are from the reminiscences of an evening like this, when we are able to recall the most fleeting thing in the world, a woman's smile."

"I imagine, Mr. Willis, you have never quite done your justice; you have never been quite enough in earnest, pardon me, to accomplish all you are capable of doing."

There you do me more than justice. I have really been a very diligent man, and have made the best of myself. From the first I weighed my capacity, and estimated what I was able to perform; I have kept within my limits, and made the most of the field in which I am best capable of moving."

"You are not pretentious, I am sure; and it seems to me your estimate of yourself is too moderate."

"I think not," I think I have achieved more in life to keep within my prescribed bounds."

"Ay, but it narrows the sphere and represses the genius."

"This vague tendency of the mind is a barrier to achievement. I determined to represent a phase in American society which was apt to be not only neglected but treated with contempt, namely, the refined, the fashionable, if you will, in contradistinction to that hard, national utilitarianism so prevalent among us. I have succeeded, and have shown that there is much that is desirable to foster and cultivate in the appliances of life, if we would redeem it from vulgarity. We have too many dreamers among the poetic, who make no mark because they have no purpose."

"I think, Mr. Willis, notwithstanding your defense, that many fine shades of character may evaporate under this aesthetic utilitarianism."

"Not necessarily; we may present a phase to the public and preserve some of the best of the old, and keep our roses. I often have letters from strangers who imagine I am not doing myself justice; earnest women, who urge me into it, that sphere, but I know myself better."

"I like that, provided one is well assured. Old Montaigne is excellent authority upon this head, and advises every man to see that the work he is doing is really his own work, and not that which another man should do."

Mr. Willis, by this rigid adherence to his own estimate of himself, secured a very distinctive reputation—fashionable, a poetic one. He was for many years a journalist, and his pen always preserved a generous air, but not advocacy of the liberal ideas of the day. Not earnest enough of a partisan, he leaned to the side of radicalism, while at the same time he preserved a strictly conservative ground.

E. OAKES SMITH.

THE WIFE.—Lord Beaconsfield, in the dedication of "Lothar" describes the person of the dedication, as "a severe critic, but a perfect wife." There is an incident illustrative of her character. She was driving down to the house to hear an important speech from her husband at the time of a grave political crisis. He, full of his subject and pre-occupied as he alighted from his carriage, shut one of her fingers in the door. Agonizing as must have been the pain, she uttered no cry till he was out of sight. Then she besought her footman to open the cruel door. "My dear," she said to one to whom she told the incident, "I would not have cried out for the whole world; in thinking of my pain he would have been so agitated that he would have forgotten all the chief points of his speech." Such a woman deserved that coronet of a viscountess which her husband, refusing all honor himself, laid at the feet of his wife.

IMAGINE HER FEELINGS.—A Detroit belle some time since received by express from an Eastern city a very handsome-looking umbrella, and she had it out on the day for the first time. Taking a Woodward-avenue car for a short ride, she reached the handle of the umbrella up to pull the belt-strap, when she desired to get off. As she pulled down the umbrella began to lengthen, and her feelings may be imagined when she found the umbrella in her hand and a sword-cane arrangement about two feet long dangling to the ground. "What a beauty!" she exclaimed, in a low voice, as she pulled the sword-cane handles didn't seem to strike her favorably, and as the car halted she left both portions behind her, and seemed a good deal confused when a man called out her name.

"I can never depend upon them things in a row. You'd better get a Derringer!"—Detroit Free Press.

"Ten dimes make one dollar," said the shoemaker. "Now go on, sir. Ten dollars make one—what?" "They make one mighty glad these times," replied the boy, and the teacher, who hadn't got his last month's salary yet, concluded that the boy was about right.

Boston Baked Beans.

Though Boston has acquired some fame, as a large consumer of this essential, baked beans have been from time immemorial a favorite dish throughout New England. The sturdy men and women of generations ago, who braved danger and hardships in planting an independent colony, added strength to their sinews and muscles by eating simple food, of which baked beans were a much cherished ingredient, and of all ancient dishes none have stood better the test of time and the caprices of the appetites of the people. But it is a little singular that, while New England is so large a consumer of baked beans, and that the knowledge of baking them properly is exceedingly limited. It may be said that one circumstance is due to the other—that is, that where it is not known how to bake beans properly, they are naturally not a popular article of diet. If the method and process of baking were patented, it could hardly be more exclusively held by New Englanders. In New York and other municipalities, a contempt is often expressed for the Athenian love for baked beans. Travelers, not being acquainted with a fashionable club house, on the occasion of a special gathering, sent by express to this city for twenty-two quart pots of Boston baked beans. This manner of obtaining a dish they considered to be frequently resorted to, undoubtedly with a profit alike to the buyer and seller. An experienced baker of this city, being asked why baked beans were not as popular in New York as in Boston, said: "Because the permanent heat, as you cook them, they don't soak them enough, boil them too much, and then take them out of the oven before they are half baked." "But it would be easy enough for them to learn how to cook beans," was the reply. "I don't know," he said. "There is a lunch counter in one of the busiest sections of New York, where genuine Boston baked beans are served, which is reported to be doing a thriving business. Reliable Testimony.

Where testimonials give the residence of the parties it is an easy matter for any person to verify them. Thousands of people from all parts of the Pacific Coast and have expressed the opinion that there is no other article in the world equal to PHOSPHATE SOAP for the treatment of skin diseases. Among others we give the following from a reliable source:

STANDARD SOAP COMPANY—GENTS: Some two or three months ago, I had a boy about two years old that had suffered for a year with a severe eruption on the head and face, caused by itching. The child was in such misery that it would often be awakened out of sleep by the severe itching. We tried everything we could find, but nothing seemed to give any permanent relief, and we tried PHOSPHATE SOAP. Before we had used one cake, the child's head and face were entirely healed, and there has been no appearance of the disease since.

STANDARD SOAP COMPANY—GENTS: Having received your box of PHOSPHATE SOAP, and having used only one cake of SOAP of the three, I am happy to say that it has completely cured my sore eyelids which was caused by the alkali dust in Idaho.

STANDARD SOAP COMPANY—GENTS: After a number of trials of Soaps, I have learned that the PHOSPHATE is undoubtedly the very best for shaving. I thank you for its introduction.

Diuretic
KIDNEY TEA
Kind nature's own remedy—her "last, best gift" to man. A plant which grows in mountain fastnesses, seldom broken by human feet. There are thousands afflicted with diseases of the kidneys and urinary organs who suffer in silence, rather than to make known their troubles. Others seek relief by the use of various patent medicines, which do not aggravate the disease, at least do not lessen it. Even those who secure the advice of physicians often fail to get relief, owing to the very complicated and delicate nature of the organs affected. The OREGON KIDNEY TEA is a strictly vegetable preparation, and will not injure the smallest child, nor the most delicate woman, but will cure Pain in the Back and Kidneys, nervousness of the Bladder, Indigestion, Gravel, Hematuria, Bright's Disease, Dropsy, Catarrh of the Bladder or Kidneys, Brick Dust Deposit in Urine, Leucorrhoea, Painful or Suppressed Menstruation, and all complaints arising from a diseased or debilitated state of the kidneys or urinary organs of either sex.

The Yolo Democrat

Thursday, July 29th, 1880.

POLITICAL CLIPPINGS.

Pacheco says the Democrats will carry New York. Says the Boston Post: Chagrined in the Garfield's district.

The Ventura Signal bears on all sides of Republicans declaring for Hancock.

The Times' New York special says: Jay Gould predicts the election of Hancock.

Colonel Forney is writing a campaign life of Hancock. Forney is awfully lively for a fresh convert.

Colfax defends Garfield. "It is well for him very besting! "Birds of a feather flock together."

General Hancock is said to be a Democratic Valentine because he was born on the 14th of February.

The Chicago Times calls for a list of the battles in which General Arthur served. Better include Garfield too.

The pending campaign interests Senator Conkling so profoundly that he is about to visit Europe for the summer.

The New York Tribune of Feb. 26, 1873, called for James A. Garfield's expulsion from Congress, for bribe taking.

General Garfield has not yet availed himself of the New York Herald's standing offer of the courtesy of its columns to defend his record.

The Times' Galveston (Tex.) special says: General Chambers, the Greenback candidate for Vice-President, will withdraw on account of ill health.

Potter Palmer, the famous dry goods merchant of Chicago, who worked so industriously for the nomination of General Grant, has joined a Hancock and English Club.

The Chicago News, which warmly espoused the cause of Grant, has declared in favor of Hancock and English. The News is the most extensively circulated paper in Chicago.

There is not a discordant note afloat in the Democratic party in any part of the country. Everywhere harmony and determination to win prevail. That is a good and healthy sign.

The Greenback State Convention July 22d nominated W. A. Howe, of Solano, for Congress, of the Third District, and J. D. Godfrey, of Los Angeles, of the Fourth District.

The Quincy Herald is of the opinion that if the Democrats of Illinois will do their whole duty that State will be carried by not less than 15,000 majority for Hancock and Trumbull.

The Cincinnati Commercial says: "There are three points in General Garfield's record that require explanation, and they relate to the Credit Mobilier, the Salary Grab and the De Golyer pavement.

Garfield's friends say that he went into the Credit Mobilier because he didn't know any better. He must have been stupid to sell his good name for $329, but he learned better and charged De Golyer $5,000.

Judge Jeremiah Black in a letter to the Philadelphia Times testifies as follows: "I do not know any really good man who has time and assisted in doing so many bad things in politics as General Garfield."

The indications are, remarks the Bridgeport, Connecticut, Farmer, that in this State General Hancock's majority will be larger than Tilden's was four years ago, and probably the prospect is very much the same in other States.

If General Garfield had been dipped in the Schuylkill after a freest he couldn't be muddier. For this the unrepentant Democracy is in no way responsible. A Republican Committee put on the first coating, and it has stuck.

It should be borne in mind that so far from being nominated as a military candidate, Gen. Hancock is brought forward as the true champion of personal rights and the ascendancy of the civil power over the military in time of peace.

The Republican papers have given up as impossible the task of cleaning Garfield's record and are trying by the most idiotic of lies to blacken the gallant Gen. Hancock. And still Republicans keep declaring they'll vote for the hero of Gettysburg.

Charles Francis Adams speaks for many Republicans when he says: "I would not support any member of the Republican party who had any sort of mixture with the fraud by which Mr. Hayes obtained the Presidency." Garfield was one of the 8-10-7.

Sacramento Bee (Republican): The nomination of Hancock by the Democrats has driven the "bloody shirt" out of politics, and all good people rejoice thereat. It has taken the wind out of the sails of many spread-eagle orators, and at that many more rejoice.

Captain John A. Fitzgerald, of San Francisco, who served under General Hancock during the war, and who is now a member of the Grand Army of the Republic, asserts that two-thirds of the Grand Army of the Republic of the United States will vote for Hancock.

A party of personal friends of General Grant dined with the General at his home at Galena. The after-dinner conversation turned upon the nominations at Cincinnati, and Gen. Grant unhesitatingly and unreservedly expressed his belief that Hancock would be elected.

Says the Albany Argus: General Hancock is the idol of the nation, the foremost statesman of either hemisphere. His career is an open book. In it is written some of the noblest facts of American history and character. His nomination insures election. His election insures inauguration.

The Republican papers assure us that although Garfield drew his back salary he afterwards returned it to the Treasury; whereas the Chicago Record asks: "Supposing a man should steal your horse, and when he should find that he was to be called to an account, should return your horse to his stable or pasture; is he any the less a thief?"

The Democratic Blue and Gray Legion held a meeting at Union Hall, San Francisco, July 19th. The roll of the Legion numbers about 1,400 names. Arrangements were made for a grand rally at an early day. Captain Bush, one of the speakers, announced that some 300 prominent Republicans were about forming a club in the interest of Hancock and English.

Jeems Garfield was a brigadier. Who fought with Rosecrans. But who of late has acted queer. His fortunes to advance. In Congress he made record fast. Till seven brief years ago Credit Mobilier laid him out. As Oakes Ames' men, will show. As De Golyer's paying schemes His skirts are badly fouled. The people vote that jobberjacks Two long has bedded and bedded.

The Republicans do not seem to prosper in the manufacture of campaign stories. The Thomas Jerome letter was stamped as a forgery before it was twenty-four hours old. Judge Black promptly discredited the authenticity, attributed to him, of Order No. 40; and now Cardinal McCloskey declares that the congratulatory letter credited to him is a forgery. And now comes a denial of the purchasable overcoat baring story.

Mr. Blaine, notwithstanding the Mulligan business and various other scandals, is not to be mentioned in the Garfield story. He was never convicted; Garfield was. No committee of Congress ever reported that he had committed perjury; and he was never declared a bribe taker by the judgment of any court, a declaration which the Poland committee made for Garfield in one case, and the Cook County Circuit Court in another.
